About the conference

Libraries play a vital role in enhancing educational quality and supporting NAAC accreditation. Evolving from traditional repositories, they have become hubs for research, innovation, and lifelong learning. Libraries provide essential resources, aid in curriculum development and support faculty and student research. For NAAC accreditation, they help ensure academic infrastructure standards and contribute to learning outcomes. By integrating technology and offering services like data management and research guidance, libraries foster continuous improvement, academic development, and institutional growth. This conference aims at providing valuable insights into the role of library and opportunities for professional development through expert sessions and research paper presentations. It is open to academicians, IQAC members, librarians, and library science students.
